

PURE CREAMERY BUTTER.

PURE

Breakfast just hasn't been the same since hearing morning news reports of toxic and radioactive materials present in some agricultural fertilisers. Despite assurances from various officials, the public has begun to wonder just what systems are in place to protect the food it is eating.

A search of Archives Investigator (www.records.nsw.gov.au) shows the various agencies that have regulated primary industry in New South Wales since 1816 to the present. In this issue we note some of the boards, panels, commissions and committees that have overseen the production, distribution and marketing of agricultural products.

In particular we highlight the Orient butter label — one of a series of label designs submitted by dairy producers to the Department of Agriculture to register their butter brand names and trademarks.
