

Every living thing is an elaboration on a single plan. As humans we are mere increments — each of us a musty archive of adjustments, adaptations and modifications and providential tinkering stretching back 3.8 billion years.

Bill Bryson, A Short History of Nearly Everything

'Every living thing is an elaboration on a single plan. As humans we are mere increments — each of us a musty archive of adjustments, adaptations and modifications and providential tinkering stretching back 3.8 billion years.' Bill Bryson, A Short History of Nearly Everything